"Fairy folk a-listening hear the seed sprout in the spring, and for music to their dance hear the hedgerows wake from trance, sap that trembles into buds sending little rhythmic floods of fairy sound in fairy ears. Thus all beauty that appears has birth as sound to finer sense and lighter-clad intelligence."

“This yearning for their friendship and for the mere knowledge that they exist has its root in the fact that the fairies are there, silent and unseen to most people, yet close at hand-tapping, as it were, with elfin hands on the thin shell between the two worlds.”

“Science seeks to explain everything - but maybe we don’t want everything explained. We don’t want all the magic to go out of life. We want to remain connected to the secret parts of our inner beings, to the ancient mysteries, and to the most distant outposts of the universe. We want to believe.
And as long as we do, the fairies will remain.”

"You just have to pay attention. If you don't, you'll miss them, or see something else - something you expected to see rather than what was really there. Faerie voices become just the wind, a bodach... scurrying across the street becomes just a piece of litter caught in the backwash of a bus."
